

PHILOSOPHIA CHRISTI

EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION	CRAIG HAZEN	3
ARTICLES
The Husserlian Roots of Dallas Willard's Philosophical and Religious Works: Knowledge of the Temporal and the Eternal	GREG JESSON	7
Discovering God and Soul: A Reappraisal of and Appreciation for Cartesian Natural Theology	JOSHUA R. FARRIS	37
D. Z. Phillips on Christian Belief, Immortality, and Resurrection	BRENDAN SWEETMAN	57
The Actual World from Platonism to Plans: An Emendation of Alvin Plantinga's Modal Realism	WALTER SCHULTZ	81
God and the Multiverse: A Thomistic Modal Realism	W. DAVID BECK AND MAX ANDREWS	101
Four-Dimensionalism, Evil, and Christian Belief	R. T. MULLINS	117
Persistence and the Resurrection: Why a Christian Should Not Be a Four-Dimensionalist	KENNETH HOCHSTETTER	139
Christianity's Many Ways of Salvation: Toward an Unrealistic Salvific Inclusivism	MARK S. MCLEOD-HARRISON	155
PHILOSOPHICAL NOTES
Who's Truth? A Response to Davis and Franks's "Against a Postmodern Pentecostal Epistemology"	JOSHUA LEE HARRIS	175
On Jesus, Derrida, and Dawkins: Rejoinder to Joshua Harris	RICHARD B. DAVIS AND W. PAUL FRANKS	185
A (Partial) Peircean Defense of the Cosmological Argument: A Response to Rowe	J. CALEB CLANTON	193
Aseity of Persons and the Oneness of God: A Review Essay of Brannon Ellis on Calvin's Trinitarian Theology	NATHAN D. SHANNON	207
BOOK REVIEWS
Bana Bashour and Hans D. Muller, eds., Contemporary Philosophical Naturalism and Its Implications	STEWART GOETZ	219
Hilary Kornblith, On Reflection	KEGAN J. SHAW	222

Michael W. Austin, Wise Stewards: Philosophical Foundations of Christian Parenting	MIHRETU P. GUTA	227
Vern S. Poythress, Inerrancy and Worldview: Answering Modern Challenges to the Bible	ADAM OMELIANCHUK	230
Mark W. Foreman, Prelude to Philosophy: An Introduction for Christians	MICHAEL T. MCFALL	233
NEWS AND ANNOUNCEMENTS		238

Editor's Introduction

This issue of Philosophia Christi is not a formal memorial issue for our colleague, teacher, and friend, Dallas Willard (1935–2013). Although, I wouldn't be surprised if such an issue were to be published in the near future. (No, this is not an announcement or call for papers, but perhaps it is a subterranean hint that I hope one of you might organize a conference with cutting-edge interdisciplinary papers focused on Dallas's life and thought.) But the fact that a wonderful article by Willard's friend and mentee, Greg Jesson, appears first in this volume shows that our desire to honor Dallas is building to the point that it is oozing out in multifarious ways (see also our tributes here: <http://bit.ly/EPWillard>). Jesson captures this in his first paragraph that deserves repeating here.

In any lifetime, there are at best only one or two people who completely transform the way we think about our short time on this earth. Such people are exceedingly hard to classify because they see all the ultimate issues of life in ways that their generation has either missed or disregarded. Unquestionably, for many, Dallas Willard was one of those larger-than-life figures in the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries.

And the Jesson-Willard-Husserl essay is a wonderful gateway drug to some other profound philosophical intoxicants. A diverse mix of research articles, philosophical notes, and book reviews populates the pages that follow as we play catch up in printing some very worthy articles that have been in the on-deck circle for too long while we published some exciting theme issues in 2013. If you've been anxious to see your work in print, we have another unthemed issue on the way in the winter. We're glad to catch up and get these great contributions out to our readers.

Now is the time to register for the Annual Meeting of the Evangelical Philosophical Society, November 19–21, to be held in San Diego (as always in conjunction with the Evangelical Theological Society). Go to <http://ep-society.org/events/annual.asp> today to get preconference pricing and hotel discounts. We have a wonderful slate of EPS papers ready to be delivered by some of the finest thinkers on the planet. We also have two interesting sessions happening at this year's AAR/SBL (November 21–22), which focuses on "Finding the Theistic Foundations of Morality" and on "Punishment and Christian Love." Join us for all this stimulating scholarship and fellowship in November!

On behalf of the EPS Executive Committee, I look forward to seeing you there.

Craig J. Hazen
Biola University